PRAC Comes Home!

Dear Friends and Colleagues,

On behalf of Dentons Rodyk & Davidson LLP, it is my great pleasure to welcome you to Singapore for the 74th International PRAC Conference. The inaugural PRAC conference was held in Singapore in 1987. We are thus indeed proud and honoured to host you where it all began almost 40 years ago!

As a founding member of PRAC, our firm has long valued the deep and enduring friendships, trust and collaboration that define this network. This conference presents an opportunity to reconnect with colleagues and friends from around the world, exchange perspectives on developments affecting our profession and strengthen relationships that support clients across jurisdictions.

As a global business, financial and legal hub, our city brings together diverse cultures, ideas and opportunities. We hope you will enjoy not only the conference programme, but also the hospitality, heritage and vibrant experiences that Singapore has to offer.

We look forward to welcoming you and wish you a rewarding and enjoyable stay in Singapore.

165 YEARS
DENTONS RODYK

The Story of PRAC

In the summer of 1984 three lawyers...an American, a New Zealander and a Mexican...met in a café upstairs over a bar in Tijuana, Mexico for a lunch of lobster tacos and margaritas. The conversation drifted around to "law clubs" (the term used before "affiliations" and "networks" became the vogue), particularly those "clubs" that had sprung up between Europe, the UK and America in the years following WWII. Clubs with names like Tower Group and Club Oasis! They were generally semi-secret creatures with exclusive referral policies, but they served the purpose of increasing business among a limited number of firms in Chicago, New York, London and Paris, among other places.

At some point during lunch, a casual question was asked: "Could a similar sort of organization be put together in the Pacific and what would be the challenges?" Well, the Pacific's bigger and has a date line running through it; there's a greater variety of languages, legal systems and business cultures, and communications (in 1984) were hit and miss. Could it be done? Through the enveloping haze of tequila that had formed over the table, the answer came back: "Sure, and we're the ones to do it!"

So the Yank and the Kiwi returned to the U.S. and began trying out names for their idea on the cocktail napkins of another bar atop one of the tallest buildings in San Diego. “Pacific Law Group”? Well maybe, but what if we added banks or accounting firms to the mixture. “Council for Research and Asian Policy”? No, bad acronym. How about Pacific Rim Advisory Council (PRAC)... and it stuck.

But nothing much happened until that fall, when the Kiwi and the Yank were joined by a Canadian lawyer at a Pacific Rim venture capital fair in Los Angeles, and they decided to call a press conference to announce the launch of PRAC, confidently predicting that “all the major players would be in place by February (1985)”.

The three of them, John Brooks (the Yank from Luce Forward), Charlie St. Clair Brown (the Kiwi from Simpson Grierson) and Richard Underhill (the Canadian from Richards Buell Sutton) set out for Asia to talk to law firms about the novel idea of a non-secretive, non-referral exclusive Asia-Pacific network of law firms. Their first ally and strongest supporter was Pathma Selvadurai of Rodyk & Davidson, who helped land Clayton Utz after two hours of tea and talk in the coffee shop of the Singapore Shangri-la. Tea and beer (and other potables) figured prominently in the PRAC story. John Elder heard about PRAC over tea in the lounge bar of Browns Hotel during an IBA meeting. In Jakarta, after forty-five minutes of telling the PRAC story to Ali Budiarjo himself, the only reply from the distinguished gentleman was "I hope you liked the tea, Mr. Brooks."

After three trips to KL to talk to Y.C. Chin, "Mr. Brooks" had consumed so much tea that the short trip to Bangkok to drink cold Singhas with Suwit Suwan became a looked forward-to relief. Andy Gatmaitan agreed to join PRAC after a lunch of San Migs and Imelda Marcos jokes (something, I think, about Imelda standing on Ferdinand's shoulders in a tank of (did Andy say "excrement"?)). The interviewing of eight Japanese firms over several years introduced John to an endless variety of hot and cold sakes, and the long courting of Lee and Li ended in a basement banquet room in Taipei where John was pronounced as having "ocean capacity" for maotais. From New Delhi to Hong Kong, and from Seoul to Washington, D.C., PRAC undoubtedly owes a debt to John's remarkable liver and kidneys.

After two long and full years of work the 13 Founding Members were selected, and the first meeting was called for Singapore in February 1987. And everyone showed up. Even managing partners! And that singular thing which has always been a hallmark of PRAC happened...they all liked each other!

PRAC has now evolved from the original 13 Founding Members to today's 27 firms, and 30 is probably on the horizon. Eight firms have withdrawn over the years, some for financial reasons, others over policy disputes, but they have been replaced by stronger and more dedicated members. The tequila-born idea of 1984 has proved its durability. PRAC today enjoys the distinction of being the first, finest and most exclusive affiliation anywhere to focus a major part of its interests in the Pacific Rim. And welcome back to Singapore.

This story was first published in the PRAC Singapore Conference 1999 Handbook

Foreword by James A. Dobkin in the handbook of the first ever PRAC Conference held in 1987

On January 19, 1987, a seminar on International Technology Joint Ventures was presented in Singapore by the Pacific Rim Advisory Council ("PRAC"), an association of law firms located in countries bordering on the Pacific Ocean or having an interest in and active practice involving substantial clientele in those countries.

Membership on the Council at the time of the seminar included thirteen law firms from nine countries: Australia -- Clayton Utz (Sydney); Canada -- Fraser & Beatty (Toronto) and Richards Buell Sutton (Vancouver); Hong Kong -- Wilkinson & Grist; Korea -- Kim, Chang & Lee (Seoul); New Zealand -- Simpson Grierson Butler White (Auckland); Singapore -- Rodyk & Davidson; Taiwan -- Tsar & Tsai; Thailand -- Ukrit Mongkolnavin Law Firm (Bangkok); United States -- Case & Lynch (Hawaii), Luce Forward Hamilton & Scripps (San Diego), Brobeck Phleger & Harrison (San Francisco), and Arnold & Porter (Washington, D.C.).

The seminar was an adjunct to the first annual Board of Directors meeting of the Council which took place the following day. Attendance was by invitation only and the audience of some 150 businessmen, lawyers and other professional advisors was largely drawn from the clients and friends of Rodyk & Davidson of Singapore, the PRAC member hosting the event.

Since this seminar was the first of its kind sponsored by PRAC, careful consideration was given to the choice of a topic. The subject of International Technology Joint Ventures was selected for a number of reasons. First, this form of business association is gaining popularity in every corner of the world, reflecting a new global industrial order that offers vital prospects for technological growth through international cooperation. Second, the countries of the Pacific Rim are particularly active in the pursuit and formation of these associations. Finally, the members concluded that this theme of multinational industrial cooperation was not only timely but also representative of the international cooperative endeavor symbolized by PRAC itself.

Foreword by James A. Dobkin in the handbook of the first ever PRAC Conference held in 1987

Having recently co-authored a book on the subject, I was asked by PRAC to present a paper offering an overview of the important principles applicable to international technology joint ventures. Rodyk & Davidson was asked to present a "country chapter" describing principles of particular importance to establishing and operating international joint ventures in Singapore. A firm from each of the countries represented on the Council was then asked to prepare similar papers for distribution to the seminar participants which would discuss the important principles from the perspective of each member country.

The seminar was a success. The papers have been expanded and edited to achieve consistency of format. They now comprise the chapters of this book. I would like to acknowledge and express my gratitude for the efforts in that regard of law clerks Mary Beth Beirut and Sami L. Toutounji and of my partner Jeffrey A. Burt, all of Arnold & Porter. Although PRAC did not have members from the People's Republic of China or Japan at the time of the seminar, chapters on these two countries have been included because of their obvious importance to the international business community.

The literature on international technology joint ventures is sparse, despite the business world's overwhelming preoccupation with the subject matter, and the literature that does exist does not address specifically the countries of the Pacific Rim.

Accordingly, we expect that this book, tailored as it is to regional considerations, will contribute to the literature on the subject of international joint ventures and will serve as a meaningful resource for those interested or actually engaging in multinational industrial cooperation involving the Pacific Rim countries.

Artificial Intelligence (AI) is rapidly reshaping the way organisations operate, make decisions, and deliver value. As AI adoption accelerates across industries, businesses, professionals, and policymakers are grappling with both its transformative potential and the ethical challenges it presents.

In this session, our VIP speaker, Senior Minister of State Murali Pillai SC, will explore the evolving AI landscape and its impact on the legal profession, touching on shifting client expectations around legal advice and legal costs, as well as key considerations around AI ethics.

Cyber Security Threats to Law Firms

26 October 2026 (Monday) 11.00am-12.15pm, SKAI Suite 3 & 4 (Level 69)

Law firms are increasingly attractive targets for cybercriminals due to the highly sensitive and confidential information they hold. As cyber threats continue to evolve in sophistication and scale, firms face growing risks ranging from ransomware attacks and data breaches to business email compromise, insider threats, and AI-enabled cybercrime.

In this panel discussion, industry experts will share insights into the latest cyber security challenges facing the legal profession, emerging threat trends, and lessons learned from real-world incidents. Panellists will also discuss practical strategies for strengthening cyber resilience, managing third-party risks, safeguarding client data, and fostering a culture of cyber awareness across the organisation.

Business Session #3

Practice Management - Career Paths in Law Firms Today / Where are the lawyers?

26 October 2026 (Monday) 2.00pm-3.30pm, SKAI Suite 3 & 4 (Level 69)

The legal profession is undergoing significant transformation. Shifting workforce expectations, evolving career aspirations, technological disruption, and changing client demands, the 'work-life balance' aspiration and work from home practices are reshaping the traditional law firm model.

As firms compete for talent in an increasingly dynamic market, many are asking: where are the lawyers, and how can firms attract, develop, and retain them? Why is there an increasing attrition rate of young to mid-level lawyers? This panel session will explore the changing career landscape within law firms, examining trends in recruitment, retention, succession planning, hybrid working, and alternative career paths.

Panellists will discuss what today's lawyers value in their careers, how firms can adapt to a multi-generational workforce, and the strategies needed to build sustainable and resilient legal practices for the future.

As geopolitical tensions reshape the global legal landscape, businesses face increasing uncertainty from economic sanctions, regulatory divergence and emerging technologies such as AI. In this session, the speakers will examine the legal implications of these developments, including the role of sanctions in domestic proceedings, anti-suit and anti-enforcement injunctions, and state immunity in AI-related disputes. Business Session #5

M&A: Is the K-Shaped Market Good Or Bad?

27 October 2026 (Tuesday) 10.30am-12.00pm, SKAI Suite 3 & 4 (Level 69)

This year's M&A deals are projected to hit US$4 trillion in value. The majority will be megadeals of values above US$5 billion each. Mid-size deals are struggling. The USA, Europe, Latin America and Asia Pacific deal values are increasing but number of deals are decreasing compared to 2025- hence a "K-Shaped M&A market". Which are the 'flavours' of the year for M&A - AI, Aerospace & Defence, Power & Energy, Data Centres? How do businesses operate in an increasingly uncertain geopolitical and economic environment? Rising protectionism, geopolitical tensions, shifting regulatory regimes, and heightened scrutiny of cross-border investments are reshaping the global deal landscape and influencing how transactions are structured, negotiated, and executed.

This session will examine the key challenges and opportunities facing dealmakers in today's fragmented world. Speakers will discuss what types of deals they experience in their countries, the preferred targets, how these are funded, the impact of foreign investment controls, sanctions, supply chain considerations, antitrust developments, and sector-specific regulations on M&A activity, as well as emerging trends across key markets. The session will also explore practical strategies for managing deal risks and navigating an increasingly complex regulatory environment while continuing to drive growth through strategic acquisitions.
